YOUR HOME ISN'T STANDARD.
WHY SHOULD YOUR HOME
INSURANCE BE?

It's not uncommon for a newly built home to be of 'non-standard' construction, as homebuilders look to build something a little different and more sustainable. For example, a property may include a ground source or air source heat pump or other modern technology such as solar panels, wind generators or power walls.

When it comes to insurance, the definition of 'non-standard' can vary greatly and often there isn't a tick box that perfectly reflects a property's construction. It may seem like a small issue at the time, but at the point of a claim it could become the difference between your claim being paid or not. There is a myriad of insurers on the market, each with their own requirements, restrictions and definitions of non-standard. That's why you need an insurance broker.

WHY YOU NEED A BROKER FOR YOUR HOME INSURANCE

COVER

Cover restrictions are typically in the policy wording – often referred to as the small print – so you'd be forgiven for missing them. But we won't miss them. We'll make sure your property and air source heat pump are properly insured.

PREMIUM

It's our job to make sure you pay the right premium. By using our extensive market knowledge, leverage and relationships with insurers, we can negotiate to get our clients the cover they need at a fair price.

CLAIMS

We understand that any insurance claims can cause upset and inconvenience. Our in-house Claims Team will help guide you through a loss and get you the best possible settlement quickly and without fuss.

If you're not sure if your home needs non-standard home insurance, please call us for advice.
